

Standing Up While Sitting Down

So much controversy, in so many places, that it's hard to focus on the fact that a certifiable sociopath is actually considered to be a viable candidate by about a third of the electorate. One of the controversies is football related, so I'll "tackle" it first. Colin Kaepernick, quarterback for the Forty-niners, refused to stand during the national anthem in protest to the police state we find ourselves in. Many, myself included, support the protest. Others are calling for his head; and at least, his job. Of course those with the guillotine are the same ones who support the parents of American children being deported, all Muslims being on a blacklist, and black people returning back to the days when they were "well fed and cared for". Colin Kaepernick should continue standing up for his rights by sitting down, in my opinion. We need more like him.