

Trusting The Nobles

Turns out the "poncey" class in Great Britain didn't realize that a third of their wealth was going to be washed away by their xenophobic vote to leave the European Union.

It's a shame that the English people have been led astray by their nobility for so long. It seems like after a few hundred years you'd get past the idea that the monarchy has your best interests at heart.

They certainly did in Ireland, or at least most of it. Looks like Scotland has finally got a clue.

I'm in favor of England, like the cheese, standing alone. We'll see how it goes.